Descent Newsletter (14) March 2022

Welcome to another Descent newsletter

Our presentation of the rescue coverage in Ogof Ffynnon Ddu that appears in our current issue has drawn a lot of comment, all good, so our thanks go not only to the multiple authors and photographers who helped to put it together, but also to our readers for the encouragement. If you have not seen a copy, it isn't too late ... Click on the cover to go directly to the page.

Our next issue is almost ready to go to print, with caving news and articles in plenty. It feels like this is an issue of discovery, from finds made during the pandemic both at home and internationally. Adding to the rescue statistics for 2021 readers will find features on the major archaeological discovery in Devon, Sherford Bone Cave, and the highly significant penetration into the Stoney Middleton Master Cave in the Peak District. This has been searched for over many years and, to place it in the context of other caves in the region, our centre pages are given over to a large catchment area map showing the relative connections, actual or potential. Especially in light of all the recent increased production costs, it helps that if you haven't renewed your subscription but intend to do so, now's the time to make life easier for us here at Descent.

We hope you will look forward to receiving the next Descent.

Best wishes from
Chris & Judith
