Descent Newsletter (15) May 2022

AS we head into the summer months and caving ever more returns to normal, we are working hard on bringing you the latest news in the forthcoming edition of Descent.

The current edition for April has been out for a while now, with a major find reported in the Peak District that receives an update in the next issue (divers entered the Stoney Middleton Master Cave, and diggers have now entered the extension to provide 'dry' access). The current issue is still available of course (click on the cover for a link), as are subscriptions if you need to renew or take out a new one.

Added to the regional news pages, coming up are exploration articles at home and abroad, news of films released both online and in the cinema, history in the form of bone caves in Devon and inhabited caves in the Peak, memories of a different era in Yorkshire Dales caving, the end (or not) of the CRoW campaign, and a major (major!) prize in a new competition. Don't miss the chance to win a flagship caving light from Petzl, the latest DUO RL worth nearly £750.

This newsletter started with looking forward to summer months, so this also means we are coming into T-shirt weather. And yes, we do sell T-shirts ... If you fancy getting one for yourself or a friend, during checkout use the code tshirt10 to take off 10% (and don't forget, all our prices include postage). The offer runs until the end of May.

We hope you will look forward to receiving the next Descent.

Best wishes from
Chris & Judith
